Citizens' frustrations vented on city council

by Lisa Parsons

Several concerned citizens voiced their frustrations with the city's intercommunication system and lack of response to their civic beautification efforts at the Lemon Grove City Council meeting Monday night.

Dennis and Elsa Hay, Lynn Alexander and several other Main Street residents decided six months ago to clean up a portion of their street and plant some trees. They contacted City Hall to find out what sort of paperwork was needed and who could help them when they ran into difficulties. According to Alexander, what they got, was the runaround, "The City was very lacking in information," she said. More time went by and, in frustration, they took things into their own hands, "We did the research. We contacted the landscape architect. We did all the legwork," explained Alexander.

The Hays also stated their frustrations, "We were willing to pay for the project. It wasn't going to cost the city anything," said Dennis Hay, "It took 6 1/2 months and that's ridiculous. There's no excuse."

Alexander went on to suggest that there needs to be more training of City Hall employees and more feedback from the community. "We feel that there is a problem in City Hall with the employees and we feel that we are are being met with a very apathetic attitude."

The citizens said they would also like to see the formation of a beautification project so it is easier for other groups to clean up their neighborhoods in the future.

Members of the council responded by thanking the citizens for bringing the matter to their attention and made suggestions that would facilitate communication in the future.

In other business, the council voted to approve approximately $135,000 in improvements and revitalization of the Community Center located on School Lane. The plans include the total refurbishment of the Community Center and converting the meeting room into offices for the Recreation Department.

City staff recommended that the money for the project be taken out of the Facility Replacement Account.

The Community Center was remodeled about ten years ago and has been well used since. The remodeling is necessary to keep the basically sound building in good condition.

Heartland Fire Agencies promote Spring Clean-up Month

by Lisa Parsons

The year 1990 was proclaimed "Fire Safety and Burn Prevention Awareness Year" by the Governor of the State of California and, in keeping with this proclamation, March has been declared "Spring Clean-Up Month," promoted locally with a demonstration of the combustibility of wood roofing materials at The Heartland Fire Agencies facilities.

Many Heartland departments have experienced roof fires caused by sparks from an unprotected chimney. Chimneys without chimney caps allow sparks to fly out and land on the roof, causing the roofing material and debris on the roof to catch fire.

"Shake shingles are the worst thing you can put on a house as far as I'm concerned," said San Miguel Fire Chief Dan Reed, who was conducting the demonstration. "They just mean trouble to me. It's like putting kindling on top of your roof."

He explained that when a spark lands on a shake shingle roof it sinks into the shingles in much the same way as a burning cigarette would sink into a mattress. The ember smolders and burns the material around it, making it very difficult to detect visually or by a smoke detector. Not only do the wooden shingles and debris on the roof contribute to the fire, but the tarpaper that is put on the roof to water proof it adds to the fire.

The fires on shake shingle roofs are also difficult to put out. Firefighters must climb up on the roof and use a rubbish hook to rip the shingles and other roofing material off.

Reed said when firefighters are called to a scene where there are many houses on fire, they usually can't spend time on the houses with shake shingle roofs. "We have to spend time on the houses [with other roofing materials] we can save," he warned.

For people who like the look of shake shingles, there are now companies making simulated shingle roofs made of painted concrete, said Reed.

But if you have a shake shingle roof and can't afford to re-roof, there is an inexpensive safety measure that can be taken--a chimney cap.

A chimney cap is a small metal and mesh dome that is placed on top of the chimney to retard sparks that costs about $30. An inexpensive, but temporary alternative is to buy a piece of 5/8" screening and put it on the chimney weighted down by bricks.

"I can't stress the importance of checking fire places and putting chimney caps on," said Reed. "Think about it now. Clean-up and be ready for next winter."

Newspaper offices move one block east

The offices of the Lemon Grove Review, Spring Valley Bulletin and La Mesa Forum have moved one block east to the southwest corner of Grove and Lester in the Barwick & Knowlton Law Offices building, 3434 Grove Street.

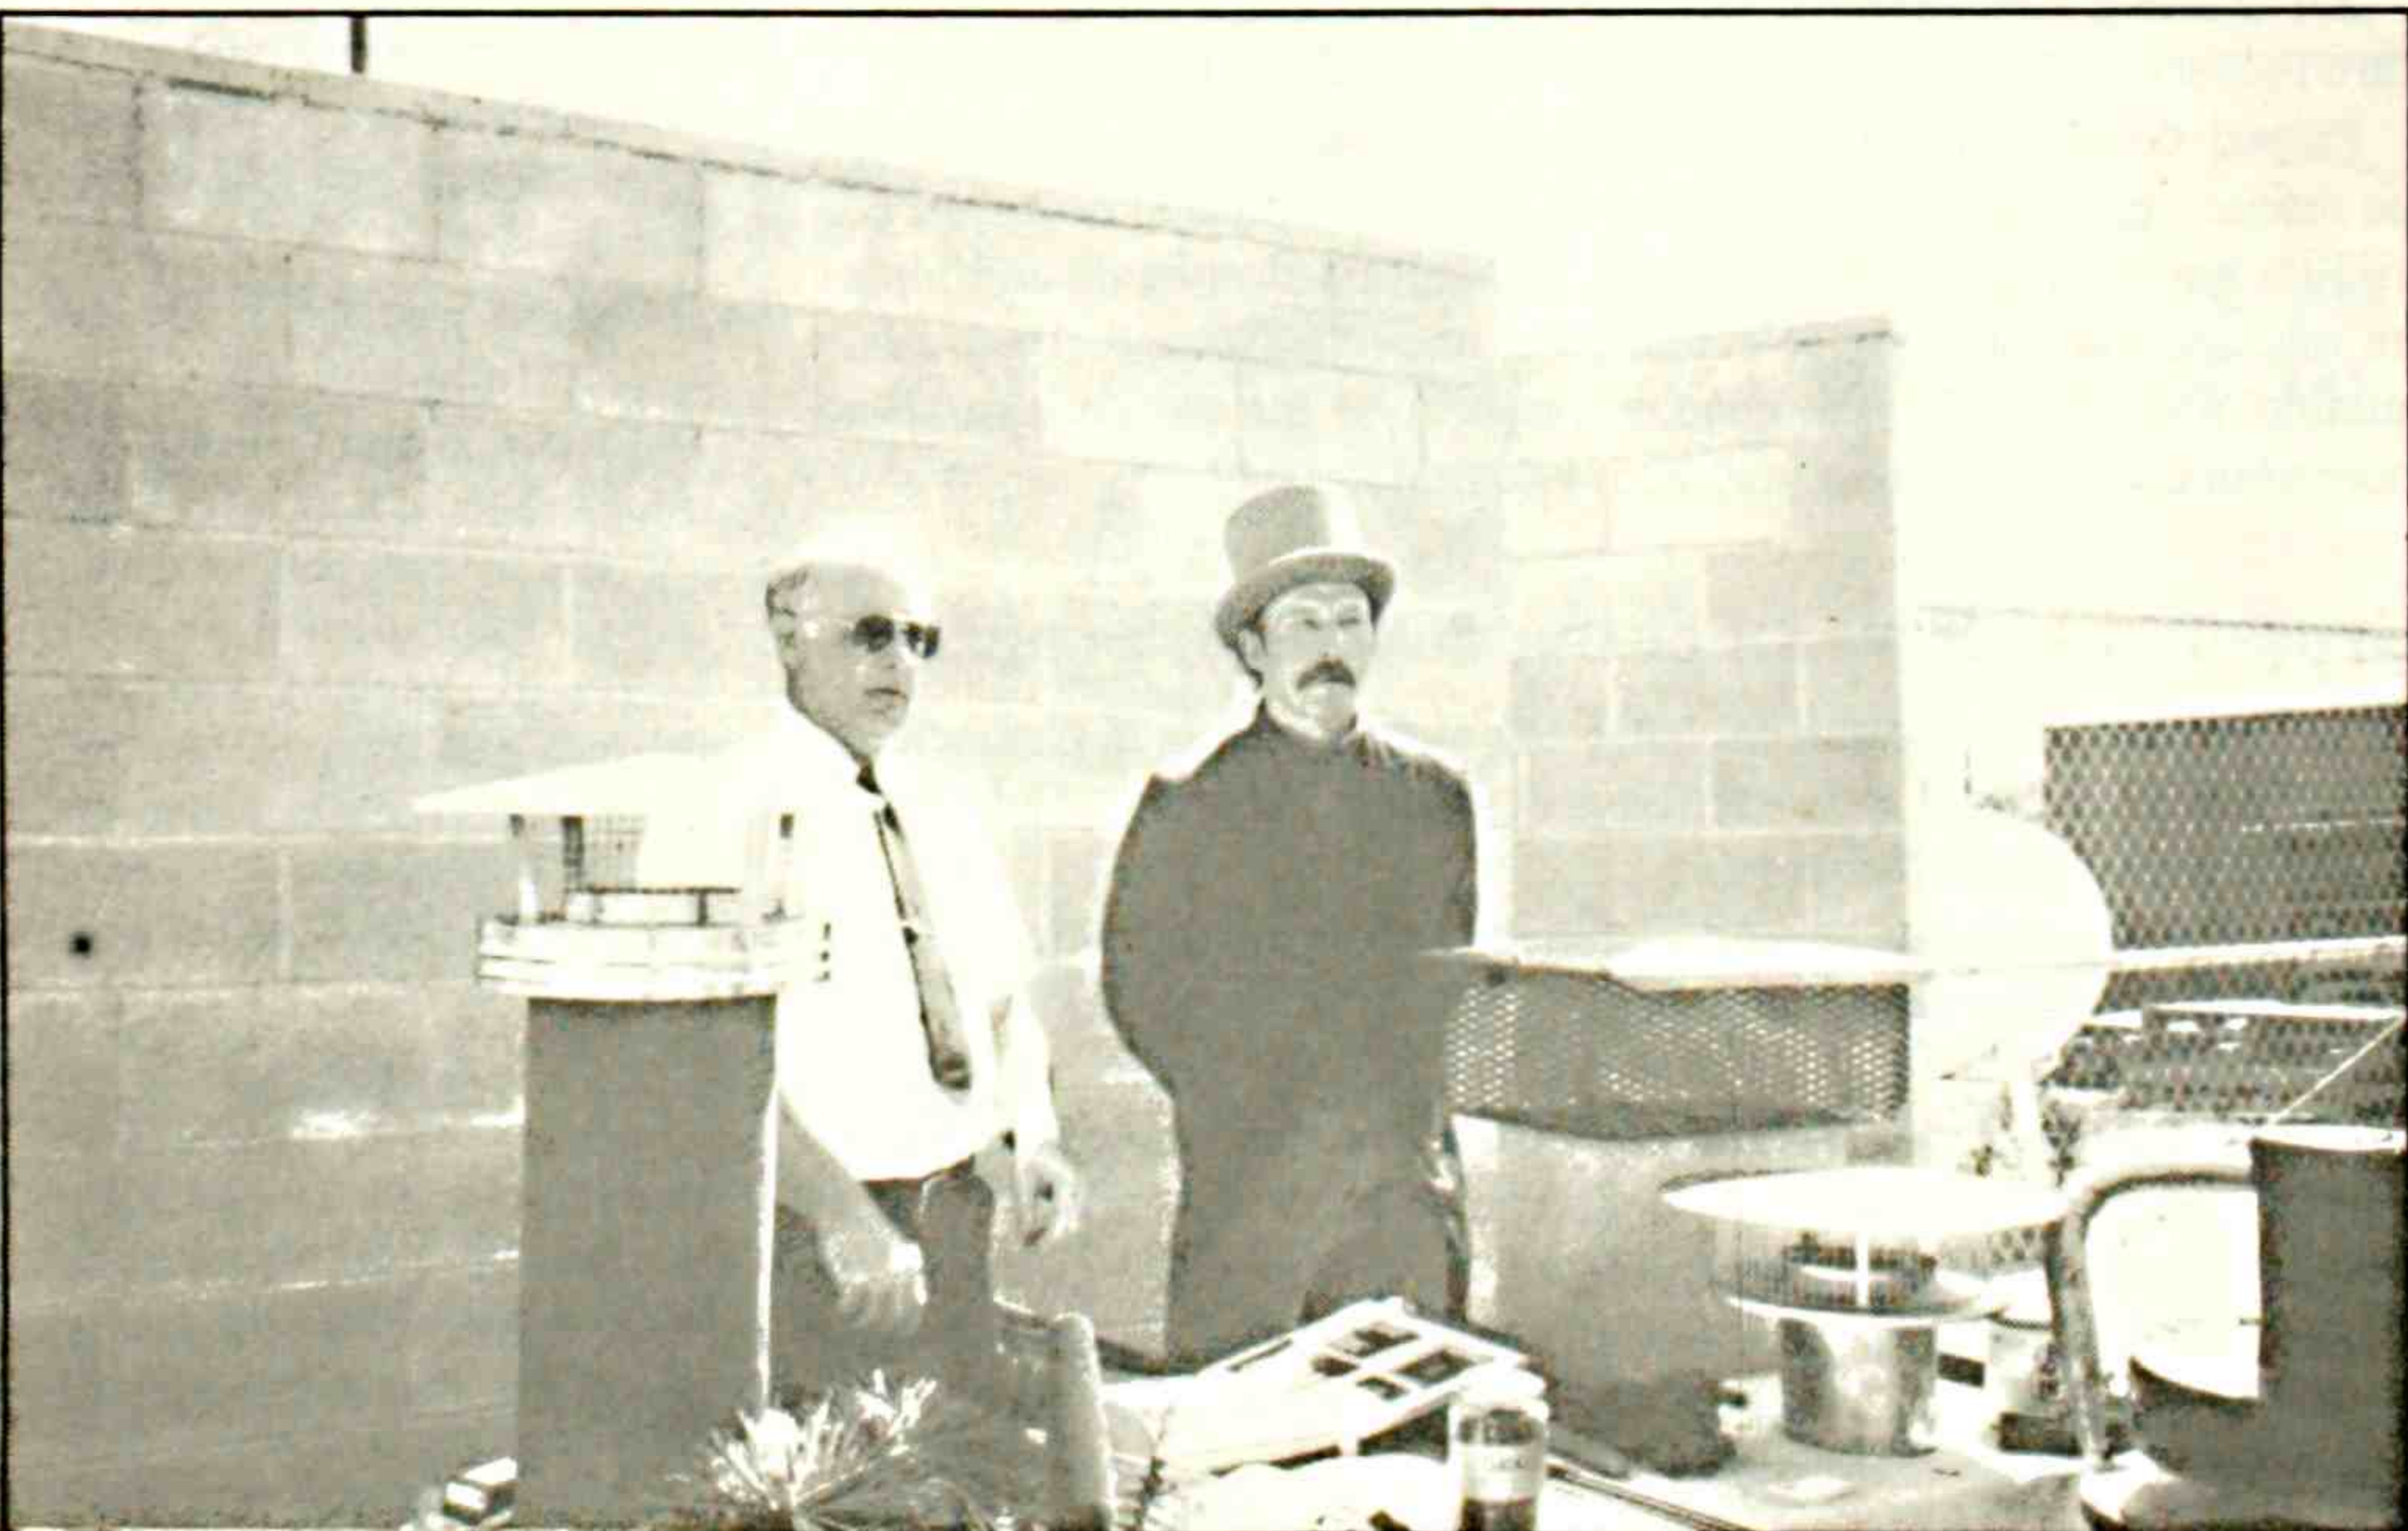

We decided to move from the Lester plant because we are no longer printing the paper in the building and therefore we don't need the 2,900 square feet.

The building is now for lease and Max Goodwin can still be found in his office at various hours. You can contact him at his new phone number 469-0102 or P.O. Box 336, Lemon Grove, CA 92045.

The Review's phone number is still 469-0101 and our post office box remains P.O. Box 127, Lemon Grove, CA 92045.

We would love to hear from you and hope to serve you better from our new location. Please come in and see us.

Project Wildlife needs volunteers to feed and care for injured and orphaned birds and mammals

Project Wildlife would like San Diego County residents to get involved in the care and feeding of local birds and mammals. Volunteers are needed to care for injured and orphaned wildlife four hours per week at the Project Wildlife Care Facility in San Diego. volunteers are also needed to care for baby birds and baby mammals in their own homes.

"The baby bird and baby mammal season are almost upon us," said Lyn Lacye, spokesperson for Project Wildlife. "We desperately need caring volunteers to help with the thousands of injured, orphaned or displaced critters in San Diego County. Each year with encroaching development, more and more of our feathered and furry friends get into trouble and need help."

All training and supplies will be provided. The Project Wildlife Care Facility will be open seven days a weeks, twelve hours per day.

Project Wildlife, a non-profit volunteer organization, is dedicated to the rescue, rehabilitation and release of injured, orphaned or displaced wildlife native to San Diego County. Rehabilitated animals and birds are released into carefully selected, local native habitats that are safe, suitable, and allow the best chances of survival for each release. For more volunteer information, call 225-wild or 236-0842.

Grossmont offers smoking cessation program

Just in time to help smokers solve the airline dilemma, Grossmont Hospital is offering a new smoking cessation program. The "Stop Smoking Successfully!" course.

Each session includes an informational discussion, individual attention to each person's progress and techniques to break the smoking cycle.

"A person who stops smoking can expect to reduce the risk of early disability or death to nearly that of a person who never smoked," says program coordinator Rich Harvey, Ph.D.

The "Stop Smoking Successfully!" course includes 10 weekly, 90-minute treatment classes, and up to 15 follow-up sessions during the year. Those interested in finding out more about the program may attend a free orientation, offered each Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in the Laboratory Classroom at Grossmont Hospital.

Mayor Dorman proclaims March Eye Donor Month

Lemon Grove Mayor James Dorman has proclaimed March as Eye Donor Month in Lemon Grove and honored the San Diego Eye Bank on their 30th anniversary.

The San Diego Eye Bank asks, if you could help someone see again, would you be an eye donor? Eye donors help stamp out blindness by leaving a part of their body they can no longer use, their eyes.

There are more than 25,000 people in the United States who are blind because of diseased or damaged corneas. For most of these individuals, a corneal transplant would help them regain complete or partial vision. Unfortunately, at this time there are not enough corneas available to meet the needs of those who are awaiting corneal transplants. The San Diego Eye Bank is trying to end this shortage, but they need your help.

Won't you take a moment and sign a donor card? If you need a donor card or more information, call the Eye Bank at 260-7299.

Workers still needed for April 1st census counting

Census Day, April 1, 1990 is almost here and hundreds of temporary, part-time and full-time jobs with flexible hours and good pay are available in every community. Census employees earn between $6.25 and $8.00 per hour for office and field positions.

Tests are being scheduled and administered all over San Diego county for all persons interested in working for the Census Bureau. Local residents interested in Census employment are encouraged to go to one of the sites listed below.

Applicants for census positions must be at least 18 years of age (or 16 with a high school diploma or the equivalent), complete an employment application, present two pieces of identification (such as a driver's license and social security card), and take a short, general information, multiple choice test. In areas where bilingual skills are required, and citizens with these skills are not available or are otherwise ineligible, bilingual, permanent residents will be eligible for employment.

Those interested in working for the Census Bureau may contact their local employment or Census office for test schedules. East County residents may call (619) 258-4000 or 258-4011 for more information.

From Where I Sit

by Frank Andrews

The Devil made me do it!

This story is kind of a confession, at least I have to clear my conscience. Maybe after my situation and the conditions are made known, all will be forgiven.

My two lovely grandchildren and a little friend came with their mother, my daughter, from Colorado to spend two weeks of their summer vacation with us. My wife, their grandmother, works, so I was elected chairman of the entertainment committee. The kids, ages from 8 to 12 years, needed exciting things to do from early morning until late at night, otherwise life was "Bor---ing".

My eight year old grandson, Kit, would wake me nearly every a.m. about 5:00, "Gramps, let's go fishing." The closest, and one of the nicest, places for little ones to fish is Chollas Lake, so he fished and I snoozed.

After a couple fishless days at Chollas my midget "Izaak Walton" asked, "Hey Gramps, where are all the big ones you wrote to me about?"

"In the deep blue sea," I answered kind of smartly.

So the next day at dawn we were at Shelter Island pier, Kit fishing up a storm and me napping in my lawn chair on shore.

About 11:00 a.m. the little guy woke me from my dreams of beautiful mermaids and said very proudly, "Look at all the big silver fish I just caught."

In the bottom of the bucket he had four small mackerel. "Kit, those fish aren't any good to eat and besides they're way too small," I sympathetically told him.

"Please Gramps, we have to take them home to show mother and have my picture taken with me holding the fish," he pleaded.

"Old Easy" grandpa said, "Well, all right, take them home then."

We arrived home just in time for lunch, but pictures of the "Catch of the Day" had to be first. After our meal I questioned "Our Gang" as to what to do with the fish that was now lying in the hot noon-day sun on our lawn getting riper by the minute. No one had any suggestions: not in the garbage disposal, not in the trash, don't bury it in the yard for the dog to dig up later. Woe is me!

I related to the group how the New Yorkers got rid of their untouchables during the recent long city garbage collector's strike. Now this is the time where I could have kept things under control, but as soon as I spilled out the details concerning the New York dilemma, things went from bad to worse.

"The people would take their most fragrant garbage, put it in a box, gift-wrap it, and take it to work with them," Grandpa went on. "They would leave the package in their unlocked car and invariably some one would steal it during that day."

Before I knew it the stinky fish were beautifully gift wrapped, with ribbons and even a card, "To someone very special."

That afternoon's itinerary called for shopping at San Diego's most interesting and picturesque shopping center by the bay. When we pulled out for the port by the sea, the gift box was with us.

First things first, so we all headed for the center rest area and proceeded to rest. When we got up to leave the pretty package was left on the park bench, either by accident or intent. The kids were ecstatic about what would happen to the box. "The worst thing that could happen would be that some poor soul would open it and then they would have to dispose of the stinking things instead of us," I assured my mischievous bunch.

From a nearby vantage point we watched that most interesting package. Several people stopped to look it over but no one tried to take it with them.

At this point the unscrupulous hands of fate stepped into our little scheme, a security guard stopped, looked it over carefully, and took it with him. This made us start to shiver in our boots. "What law have we broken? What crime has been committed? They would just throw it away instead of us," I thought.

In just a few minutes we heard an authoritative sounding voice over the loud-speaker system, "Would the person who lost a gift-wrapped parcel please pick it up at the 'Lost and Found' office." (Usually lost and found departments keep lost items for 30 days).

We left the beautiful and interesting shopping center faster than we arrived without any shopping. We were all scared to death at what might happen to us if and when the box was opened after setting on the shelf of the hot "Lost and Found" office for at least 30 days.

How could a fully grown, supposedly sane grandparent, be a part of such an unpardonable, kiddish prank? Maybe it's second childhood, or senility, but I'll have to admit I did get a bit of a kick out of it.

To whomsoever it may concern: Please try to find it in your heart to forgive this very tired and worn out grandparent.

Sports Commentary

by John E. Wirges

Fan forgiveness-Does baseball really rate it?

Lets' move the calendar forward to June and look back at the labor dispute between the collective ownership of major league baseball and the laboring masses they employ.

Sure, they finally settled it, but at what cost? There was no harm, and apparently no foul, as far as the player's pay checks went. They're not victims.

Baseball owners locked the training camps and ruined the economic well-being of communities that host pre-season drills.

Then they bad-mouthed players for not buying a pig in a poke during the months of bogus demands that came down to 14 two-year players being included in the arbitration process.

The owners are certainly not victims. They almost ruined the game with their short-sighted and self-centered approach to labor negotiations. If anything, the owners were perpetrators of this abomination of social conduct.

We, the people of the United States, were denied escape from the drudgery of our work-a-day-till-the-end-of-time life at a time when such relief is vital to our social welfare.

We suffer our hardship at the hand of those who have no idea what it is to sweat a pay check off a time clock, or log a mighty distance with a heavy load between biscuits and gravy at dawn and a hard bed found only well after dark.

We were denied spring training. We were denied the chance to read about the promise of the future-the phenom throwers with 100 mph fastballs, the wicked willow whackers who can hit anything to any field with power and consistency, and the lightning swifty who can turn out the light at the door and get in bed before the room goes dark.

In spring, every club has a dozen or more such budding superstars in camp and each one becomes part of the lore of the American sports scene.

That is baseball's obligation. Baseball gives us hope. It dulls the ache of missing the parade and makes us each a part of something that is bigger than life.

Never mind the hurler fires his bullets in all directions save over the plate. Never mind the phenom with the bat can't hit breaking pitches with a tennis racquet. Never mind the speedy sprout can't hit and has never figured out how to steal first. All that is of little concern. Games replace dreams in good time.

What we have missed is the promise that is our due with each new spring training encampment.

The holiday season gave working stiff a short respite from the pressure of making ends meet on an hourly wage, but the reality of paying for our merry making is a hard lesson relearned from payday to payday.

The saving of sanity for working stiffs in an otherwise overwhelming world of fiscal servitude has been the escape from the daily grind and the rekindling of the flames of youth found in the sports pages during baseball's spring preparations.

We didn't get that this year. We got millionaires bickering with zillionaires. Their very numbers made it all unrealistic.

We, the people, have been had. And I'm not sure we're ready yet to forgive those who did us such an unkindness.

Diapers need changing

State Senator Lucy Killea recently outlined legislation requiring environmental warning labels on all packages of disposable diapers.

Senate Bill 2342 also prohibits child care centers from rejecting children who wear reusable diapers.

A recent Killea office phone survey of 266 California child care centers showed 26 percent refused to accept infants who used cloth diapers.

The bill also set up a toll-free "diaper-line" to provide consumers information about environmentally sound diapering options to help California solve its garbage crisis.

In 1987 more than 2.5 billion diapers were dumped in landfills or left as litter alongside our roads. California spends more than 56 million dollars every year just to dispose of diapers.

"California needs a diaper change," said Killea. "Single-use throwaway diapers represent the most significant consumer item entering our landfills today. And the state is doing nothing about it. We've taken on aluminum, glass and plastic beverage containers. We're recycling newspaper. We're moving forward on recycling oil and tires. But no one wants to touch diapers."

Commentary

by Paul Treske

Where have you gone, June Cleaver?

About ten days ago, a report was issued by a panel of the National Research Council calling for strong government support of child care. Some of the statistics quoted were eye-opening. "Forecasts suggest that by the year 2000, approximately 80% of school age children and 70% of pre-school children will have mothers who are working or looking for work outside their homes." A second noteworthy statement reported that "within five years about two thirds of all new workers will be women and 80% of them are expected to have children at some point during their careers."

With these projections, the future demography of the American home seems clear. June Cleaver has gone to work full time and someone is going to have to take care of the Beaver. With all of our nostalgic longing for a return to the "good old American home" of Father Knows Best, it isn't going to happen. More and more, "arrangements" will have to be made for our children. But there are arrangements and there are arrangements.

Despite whatever disrepute Freud and his followers may have suffered in recent years, it is an inescapable fact that a child's experiences in his/her first few years are prime determinants of the future. If the first formative years of a child's life are to be at least partially spent in child care, it follows that what goes on in that child care is of profound importance. This column is not meant to recount the horrors of child care extremes such as the celebrated McMartin case and others. Rather, it is concerned with whether child care is a hit-or-miss act of desperate convenience by a harried mother, or a planned, enriching experience carefully guarded by national standards and sufficiently skilled and paid child care personnel. For a child to reach full potential, child care must be more than well-meaning daily baby sitting which, while it may protect and feed the child, does little to stimulate learning.

Bluntly put, if mother is going to be off working alongside dad, whoever cares for the child must do mother's job with all or most of what that entails. For the less financially secure, government support for child care on a national basis is the best and most rational solution. If we truly believe that "our children are our future," we must insure that future with quality child care. It is all too clear now, that mom is not going back to housekeeping, so finding good substitutes ought to be a number one national priority.

Joe Freed on the Movies

This week's movie: Blue Steel

Officer Megan Turner (Jamie Lee Curtis) has dreamed of joining the police force ever since she was a kid. Everything about the job appeals to her...the uniform, the badge, the opportunity to assert her authority while upholding the law. The only problem is that civilian men don't understand her. "Why would a beautiful girl like you want to be cop?"

Finally she meets a man who understands her ambitions, a handsome, wealthy and quite charming commodities broker, Eugene Hunt (Ron Silver). Unfortunately, Eugene is actually a closet psychotic who sees Turner as the only person with whom he can share his dark secret. A new twist to cop flicks, Eugene doesn't want to kill Turner...he wants to kill for her. Controlled by the delusion that love and death are one and the same, he brings Turner into his life by carving her name into the bullets he reserves for his victims. Soon Turner finds that uncovering a murderer's fantasy is far less dangerous than becoming it.

Director Kathryn Bigelow's chilling tale, co-written by Bigelow and Eric Red, is both fascinating and terrifying. The character of Eugene is haunting, for at first glance, he represents the success so many Americans attempt to achieve. He really is the kind of guy you'd like to take home to meet the folks, that is unless you've caught him on a bad day and he's too busy shooting people and smearing their blood all over his body. As for Turner, her character is very real, and most can relate to her problems. Not that we've all been idolized by a homicidal maniac, but we have all been misunderstood by our friends and family.

The performances are great: Silver's psychopath is enough to give you nightmares and I think Curtis will finally get the respect she deserves as a fine actress. Strong supporting roles by Elizabeth Rena, Clancy Brown, Philip Bosco and Academy Award winner Louise Fletcher round out a solid cast.

"Blue Steel's" only flaws are in its pace, that drags slightly in the middle of the film, and in its rushed introduction of Eugene as a murderer. As an audience, we already know he is psychotic, simply by the way he looks at himself in the mirror, pretending to shoot his reflection. But his first actual victim comes far too early, and the transition Eugene makes from killing in a fantasy world to killing in the real world is premature. It sets a few opening scenes off balance.

Otherwise, the movie is totally enthralling. It keeps you tense and worried throughout, much in the same fashion as the hit film "Sea of Love." "Blue Steel" delivers suspense and drama with a stylish twist on conventional cop movies.

Lemon Grove Lutheran sponsors free concert featuring California Lutheran University choir

Lemon Grove Lutheran Church, 2055 Skyline Drive, Lemon Grove, is offering an evening of musical enjoyment on Sunday, March 25 at 7 p.m. when it sponsors the California Lutheran University choir.

The 68-voice choir is on its annual tour, performing in nine cities in California and Nevada.

Their local concert will feature Aaron Copland's "In the Beginning," written in 1947, and featuring Lisa Wallm, senior music major, as soloist. The choir will also feature two original compositions by their director, Dr. James Fritschel: "And the Trees do Moan" and "The Last Word." Rounding out the concert will be spirituals, motet anthems and a variety of lighter music.

Dr. Fritschel, professor of music at Cal Lutheran University and director of the choir since 1984, is renowned both as a composer and conductor. After 25 years at Wartburg College in Waverly, Iowa, Fritschel was awarded the Louise Goucher Memorial Scholarship given annually by the American Choral foundation. Under his direction, the Wartburg choir was the only American choral group ever to win the International Trophy at the Cork International Choir Festival in Ireland. The following year, Fritschel was selected as the first American adjudicator at that festival.

Organist Carl Bertram Swanson, professor of music specializing in organ, theory, and church music at the college, will perform with the choir.

The concert is free and open to the public.

Now is the time to join WalkAmerica and aid the Campaign for Healthier Babies

The March of Dimes WalkAmerica, the country's largest walking event takes place on Saturday, April 28, at Sea World. The 25-kilometer walk benefits the San Diego-Imperial Chapter of the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation's Campaign For Healthier Babies.

Registration for WalkAmerica is from 6:30 a.m. to 8:00 a.m. Preregistration cards are being sent in to the March of Dimes now.

WalkAmerica takes place in 1,400 communities nationwide with more than 600,000 walkers nationally. In San Diego last year, 7,000 walkers representing business, industry, labor, schools, organizations and individual walkers of all ages raised $400,000 to support March of Dimes programs.

The National Campaign For Healthier Babies is designed to help prevent birth defects, the nation's number one child health problem. Locally, programs are aimed at reducing low birth-weight (less than 5 1/2 pounds) and the high infant death rate through diagnosis and treatment of birth defects, genetic counseling and early regular prenatal care.

Join walkers in the Campaign For Healthier Babies by getting sponsor sheets now and start collecting pledges of $100 or more.

Prevention works but it costs money. For example, $100 helps provide special materials to teach hundreds of people in schools and doctors' offices about the effects of alcohol use on a developing baby. That $100 helps teach young women how to have healthy pregnancies and healthy babies. It takes at least $100 to provide assistance to a support group for parents who have children with a birth defect.

At least $250 is required to provide prenatal care classes to 10 low-income families. It takes $500 to save the life of one baby with respiratory distress syndrome. A research project at UCSD studying genetic birth defects requires a minimum of $1,000 per month.

In San Diego, $1.2 million is invested in these programs at the University of California at San Diego, San Diego State University, Children's Hospital and Health Center, Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation, the Whittier Institute, and The Salk Institute which was built with March of Dimes funds.

Help babies be born healthy by joining WalkAmerica now. for sponsor sheets or more information call the March of Dimes at 576-1211.

Earthquake !!

How to prepare for the big one

It's the trade-off that Californians pay for warm weather, sunshine and beautiful scenery: those little tremors that rattle window panes and shake the chandelier.

Scientists are convinced that, as time goes on, Southern California will be rocked by a significant earthquake. Unfortunately, they don't know when...or where...it will occur.

Since earthquakes strike without warning, the time to prepare is NOW! The chances for your survival, and that of your loved ones, can be increased by taking some precautionary measures at home and at work.

Sue Anderson, department assistant of Emergency Medical Services, and Janie Henry, clinical specialty nurse, are Grossmont Hospital's resident earthquake preparedness experts. They conduct seminars throughout San Diego County, and have collaborated on a handy booklet: "Earthquake Preparedness: When 911 Won't Work."

"The 'Quake of '89' in San Francisco and the February 28 earthquake in Upton were reminders that we all are vulnerable," says Anderson. "People need to do some homework."

She suggests discussing the "what ifs." ("What if I'm at work and the kids are at school?" "What if we are somewhere different?")

"Your family needs to know the answers to these questions," Anderson explains. To help San Diegans learn the steps to prepare for an earthquake, Anderson will present a lecture at 7 p.m. April 19 in Grossmont Hospital's Brier Patch Auditorium, located at 9000 Wakarusa St. Copies of the earthquake preparedness booklet will be available at the lecture.

For reservations to attend, call 589-4151.
